

As a self-employed businessman, working mostly from my home office, I am appalled to learn that yet another attempt is being made to water down Indiana's "Do Not Call" list privacy law. I am absolutely opposed to allowing businesses of any kind to invade my personal and business privacy by telephone or email without my express personal consent. Any firms currently doing business with any Indiana resident do not need to short circuit our wishes by tying up our phone lines with unwanted solicitations. They can use the mail. Privacy remains one of this country's basic foundations of freedom and the people of Indiana have the right to enforce that freedom with our own State laws. Further erosion by interference from the Federal government at any level is unwarranted and wholly unjustified. I Urge that the Consumer Bankers Association petition before the FCC be denied!
